Executive Summary:

Blabl is a speech therapy company that focuses on helping and improving speech impairments found in its clients (most of them being youth). The main focus of the project was to help find potential customers for the business Blabl. To do this we had to look for speech pathologists and schools that were interested in using the apps for their kids with speech impairments. Over the course of 3 months we found about 500 potential clients that may have potential interest in the company. After this we contacted them to see if they actually were interested. Alongside this we also researched potential payment options that we can use for the app. So that the higher-ups in the company could explore their options for pricing. Since the company was still in startup this research and the clients we found could ultimately decide the fate of the company.

Business Context:

Blabl was in a world with many competitors trying to sell essentially the same thing as Blabl. Blabl's main goal was to appeal to those who have speech impairments, in order to give them the chance to fix it. This means this industry is highly tailored for the purpose of reaching potential clients and appealing to people that might be interested in using our service. So the industry aspect of the business is mostly advertisement and researching and finding clients that might be interested because this will determine the success of the business. So to go more in depth into Blabl's business context it includes the use of interns to find potential clients by mostly searching for Speech-pathologist in order to contact them to see if they would be interested in our service this also requires us to look at other company's pricing to compare them to our to see how we would like to carry-on with how we want to charge our customers. We don't just look at potential clients individually but we look for ways to find a bunch of them in bulk in order to reach multiple people at a time. We did this by, like I said before reaching out to speech-pathologists and then seeing if they could use our service to work with the many clients that they have. By doing this we set up a sort of network with the people at the top being us and then below us was the speech-pathologist and then last were the actual clients. This system made it easy and productive in finding new potential clients.

Business Project Description:

By doing this we set up a sort of network with the people at the top being us and then below us was the speech-pathologist and then last were the actual clients. This system made it easy and productive in finding new potential clients. Over the course of 3 months we found about 500 potential clients that may have potential interest in the company. After this we contacted them to see if they actually were interested. Alongside this we also researched potential payment options that we can use for the app. So that the higher-ups in the company could explore their options for pricing. Since the company was still in startup this research and the clients we found could ultimately decide the fate of the company. We were also tasked with going through 1500 audio files and then deciding the speech impairment that was in that specific audio file. The purpose of this was to test out the app against actual human tests to see if the system had any errors.

Research on Pricing:

- Babbel
 - Learning Language Platform
 - $12.95/month and $83.40/year this equals $6.95 a month
- Fast ForWord
 - Program to help children struggling readers read more fluently
 - “Requires professional oversight” to use correctly
 - 1 license is around $1000 discounts available-taught with a group of other children
- iConverse
 - is an app designed for individuals with communicative disabilities
 - One time payment of $9.99 to get the app
- Talkitt
 - an app that helps people with speech and language disorders to communicate
 - Free but they accept donations
- Proloquo4Text
 - helps those who have speech challenges communicate
 - One time payment of $119.99 to get a bundle of apps that help with speech impairments
- Epic! - Kids' Books and Videos
 - Subscription like service of books, educational videos, and quizzes
 - Free 30 day trial then $7.99/month

Ideas for Blabl pricing:

- A time limit of one hour of use per day. To access the app for more time the user has to pay extra.
- Free trial: Users get to use the app for 1-3 weeks for free but after that, they have to pay to continue using it. This allows people to experience the app and hooks them onto it but they must pay if they would like to further use it.
- Baseline content is given(the most basic ones) for free, to access more advanced “levels” they would have to pay more.

Business Project Research:

For my internship I had many questions as it was a field I wasn't that familiar with. Advertising and selling of a service intrigued me very much and with that came a lot of curiosity. For this business project my main two questions were, What would be the best way to advertise to potential in the most efficient and non time-consuming way? The second question was, What would be the best way to price our service in order for it to be appealing to our clients yet still earn us profits? In order to answer the question of what would be the best way to find potential clients I found a method of doing so that would make the task easy. To find potential clients by mostly searching for Speech-pathologist in order to contact them to see if they would be interested in our service this also requires us to look at other company's pricing to compare them to our to see how we would like to carry-on with how we want to charge our customers. We don't just look at potential clients individually but we look for ways to find a bunch of them in bulk in order to reach multiple people at a time. We did this by, like I said before reaching out to speech-pathologists and then seeing if they could use our service to work with the many clients that they have. By doing this we set up a sort of network with the people at the top being us and then below us was the speech-pathologist and then last were the actual clients. This system made it easy and productive in finding new potential clients. To answer the second question of finding the best pricing for our company we had to research opposing companies to see what their pricing was. By doing this we got more information about our competition and the field we are in. This research was very beneficial and provided a lot of crucial information that the company required. I guess the one thing that limited our success as a company was the time constraint we had. I feel that the other interns and I would have had a greater contribution to the company if we were given more time to work with them and help the company grow. We were limited to just 8 hours a week to what should have been at least a part-time job worth of work-load, if we had more time we would be able to help a start-up company that was in dire need of help.

Business Project Key Learnings and Recommendations:

I believe overall this opportunity was very important and beneficial to me and I am very glad I was able to go through it. This process taught me many things for one, it taught me how to have a sort of job. Although it was just 8 hours a day I still had to go through that process of waking up early, dressing up in attire suitable for business work, and go to the location I needed to on time. During those 8 hours I was given a task by my mentor which was basically my boss and he expected me to complete that task. I believe this was a great simulation of what a job entails because if I failed to complete my task during the internship I faced the risk of losing it and with it the credit that comes with it and in like mind if you don't complete the tasks for a job or do it poorly you face the possibility of being fired. This ultimately taught me responsibility and I believe this is very important while conducting business. Another thing this taught me was advertising and reaching out to clients. To find potential clients by mostly searching for Speech-pathologist in order to contact them to see if they would be interested in our service this also requires us to look at other company's pricing to compare them to our to see how we would like to carry-on with how we want to charge our customers. We don't just look at potential clients individually but we look for ways to find a bunch of them in bulk in order to reach multiple people at a time. We did this by, like I said before reaching out to speech-pathologists and then seeing if they could use our service to work with the many clients that they have. By doing this we set up a sort of network with the people at the top being us and then below us was the speech-pathologist and then last were the actual clients. This system made it easy and productive in finding new potential clients. This ultimately helped in strategizing when reaching out to people and it will help when I need to ever find clients for something. The last major thing this internship has helped me with is looking at the other companies in my field to scout the opposition. During my time as an intern for this company I was tasked with looking at competitors and seeing their pricing. This information would later help us with deciding how we would price our product. This helped me gain perspective into the business world. I learned that you should not just be tunnel visioned on your own product or company but look at the Odu story at whole, because in reality the consumer will have to choose whether they would like your service or you competitors, so it is important to look at you competitor to see what you have to do to become more appealing. So far I feel like the company is going well for a start-up company and I believe the things we did for it will help a lot in the long run p. By collecting the amount of clients we did Blabl will be able have plenty of clients. My advice is that they continue to find clients, making sure they contract them in order for them to employ their services. Another advice I have is to continue to monitor your opponents so that you can see what they are doing and then adjust to that to be better and more appealing to potential clients.
